Facilities readies campus for fall semester

Getting a campus the size of Auburn University ready for a fall semester is a massive undertaking. Grass has to be manicured, flowers planted, buildings painted and pressure washed, and students moved in.

About 30,000 undergraduate and graduate students call the Plains home each year. More than 5,000 people work at the university doing everything from teaching to landscaping.

The men and women of Facilities Management take pride in seeing the university at its best for the beginning of each year and, particularly, each football season.

When the Auburn Oaks get TPed after a big win, its facilities out cleaning the sacred trees the next day. When parts of the campus need emergency maintenance, it's facilities staying late and coming in on the weekends to make sure things are up and running before students and faculty show up.

Whether recycling, cleaning, mowing or maintenance, facilities is ready to answer the call.

Thank you for everything you've done to start this year off for students and faculty, alike!

Photos will be shown across the following pages in the newsletter. Thank you to all those involved!
